

Science has shown that reading to your baby helps build vocabulary, speech, and later reading comprehension, literacy and overall intelligence. Yet, less than half of children under the age of 5 are read to every day. Reading aloud to your child is an important aspect of language development. It provides special bonding time between parent and child. The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) offers guidance on how to read to your child, including book suggestions for every age. Take time today to read to your infant!
